

How a new generation of designers is teaching (and earning) online

Veronica Solomon runs a virtual mentoring program for up-and-coming designers

"They were working consistently but not making any money."

PLUS

Our obsession with newness, explained

Looking for inspiration? Catch all of the season's can't-miss High Point debuts

Better Together

In the era of social distance, the concept of collaboration takes on new meaning. We checked in with designers and brands to learn the stories behind some of the season's star-powered partnerships.

BY HALEY CHOUINARD

Arteriors x Beth Webb

For her debut collection with Arteriors, Atlanta-based designer Beth Webb looked far and wide for inspiration, infusing favorite forms and materials from her travels to Japan and Ethiopia with elements from her own property in South Carolina's low country. A sensory-driven approach was important to Webb, who in her practice deploys an array of textures to create layered spaces. Here, she achieves a similar effect by incorporating rattan, carved wood and matte ceramics throughout the line of lighting, seating, occasional tables and accessories. The mix of materials gives the collection versatility, resulting in pieces equally suited for a beachside villa or sleek city dwelling.