

HIVE

Summer 2021

The Lake Effect

ON A STUNNING LAKE IN SOUTH CAROLINA, ARCHITECT
JEFFREY DUNGAN AND DESIGNER BETH WEBB CONJURE A HOUSE THAT IS AS SOOTHING AND ENVELOPING AS A DIP IN WARM WATERS

PHOTOGRAPHER: WILLIAM ABRANOWICZ

The clients had dreamed of a family refuge on the shores of Lake Keowee in South Carolina, nestled at the base of the Blue Ridge Mountains, and surrounded by a dense forest. To make that dream a reality, they turned to architect JEFFREY DUNGAN and interior designer BETH WEBB who crafted a retreat of stone and glass that even incorporates the requisite fairy-tale tower to provide views all around. Inside, softly colored plaster walls, rough-hewn wood beams, and steel-framed glass bring a new level of luxury to the rustic ideal. Two bunkrooms and a suite over the garage provide expansive space for a multitude of guests, while the pale palette, soft furnishings, and rich textures ensure that the house always maintains its serene atmosphere. The house embraces the shore, with numerous outdoor spaces designed for gatherings, even as it serves as a cozy escape.

DLN

The Design Leadership Network promotes excellence through educational programs, experiences, and resources for its members who are influential principals in architecture, interior design, and landscape design firms, corporate brands, and media outlets leading the design community.